The National Intelligencer, March 16, 1838

We deeply regret the necessity of announcing the decease of another member of Congress, the honorable Timothy J. Carter, a Representative from the State of Maine. We had not ourselves the advantage of knowing him, but the eloquent and feeling tributes to his memory from his colleagues are calculated to deepen our regret that one so deserving should have been enacted by death from the midst of us.

The usual honors were yesterday decreed in both Houses to the memory of the deceased. The funeral ceremonies take place tomorrow (Saturday) and this melancholy occurrence will prevent the transaction of any business in Congress until Monday next.

The National Intelligencer, Monday, March 19, 1838

The funeral of the late Hon. T.J. Carter, Representative in Congress from the State of Maine, took place from the Capitol on Saturday last. The day was inclement and dreary, and a number of members having taken advantage of the vacation from Thursday to Monday to make short trips out of the city, the attendance was rather thin. Everything was, however, conducted with great order, (under the direction of the committee of which Mr. Evans was chairman,) and with becoming solemnity.

The funeral service was performed by the Rev. Mr. Hawley, and an appropriate address was delivered on the occasion by the Rev. Mr. Reese, one of the chaplains to Congress.

The funeral was attended by the President of the United States and several of the Heads of Departments, as well as by the presiding officers and other officers and members of both Houses of Congress.
