

Charles Wolcott Chauncey

(- 10 Aug 1847)

The National Intelligencer, August 30, 1847

Lieut. Charles Wolcott Chauncey, United States Navy, commanding United States steamer Spitfire, died at Anton Lizardo on the 10th instant, from the effects of the prevailing epidemic. He was an officer of high reputation -- a man of worth, of noble and high-souled qualities, and ardently devoted to the profession of which he was an ornament. He has left many sincerely attached friends to mourn his loss - a loss which his brother officers will feel and appreciate.

The National Intelligencer, February 29, 1848

The remains of Fleet Surgeon Kearney and Lieutenant Charles W. Chauncey, of the United States Navy, having arrived from Mexico, they will be re-interred at the Congressional Burial ground. The funeral ceremonies will take place at the Episcopal Church, (Rev. Mr. Bean's,) near the Navy Yard, on Wednesday, March 1, at 12 o'clock.

The officers of the Army and Navy, and friends and acquaintances of the families of the deceased, are invited to attend the funeral.

Carriages will be in attendance at 11 a.m. at the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and 17th street, near the War Department.

The National Intelligencer, March 3, 1844

Lieut. C.W. Chauncey, late first of the U.S. frigate Brandywine with dispatches from the Hon. C. Cushing Commissioner to China arrived in this city some days ago.