

Ann E. Guy (- 16 Sep 1876)

The Evening Star, September 16, 1876

Sudden Death of a Lady

This morning about 11 o'clock, a portly white lady fell on 7th street, near the market, in an apoplectic fit, and Lieut. Kelly conveyed her to the American house, where she was made as comfortable as possible and Dr. Cornelius Boyle was summoned. Everything possible was done to relieve her but without avail, as death ensued about 12 1/2 o'clock. She is a large woman, weighing 170 or 180 pounds in about 60 years of age, and was dressed in black skirt, light calico overskirt, and black bonnet, and she had with her a market basket and marketing, but nothing was found on her person indicating her name or residence. It is thought that her name is Guy, mother of Sergeant Guy, of the police force, and that she resided on 7th street, between K and L southeast. Coroner Patterson was summoned, but deemed an inquest unnecessary.