Smiles may meet my face,
Tears may dim my eyes,
But no one knows how my heart aches,
For another of my dear boys has died.

Our family chain again is broken,
And parting has filled me with more pain,
But I hold as a glorious token
The bright hope of meeting them again.
By His Sister Elizabeth Penn

Sleep on, dear Harry, may your slumber
Be as silent as your love.
And when God shall call us homeward,
May we join you in heaven above.
