Scenes At Chatterton

Our party started at once for Chatterton landing, and on the way several bodies were passed, which had floated ashore. Near Chatterton landing was found a grave containing two white children, a boy and girl. From the description of the clothing, this girl was thought to be the missing daughter of Mr. Reed.

A Full Description of the clothing, and number the graves, retaining a full record of such description corresponding to each grave, so that friends of the lost can have the bodies disinterred at their leisure. Just north of Chatterton landing was found a grave where, we were informed, were buried two children, a white boy and girl. From the description given of the girl, Mr. Reed, one of our party, thought it must be his little niece, daughter of Policeman Reed, and later in the day the children were uncovered, but Mr. Reed failed to recognize her, and the little children were covered over again.
