

J.C. Ridley

(- 27 Jun 1837)

The National Intelligencer, June 28, 1837

At 3 o'clock on Tuesday morning, at Gadsby's Hotel, Major J.C. Ridley, of Granville county, North Carolina. Major Ridley arrived in this city on Saturday last, on his way home from Mississippi, and, with the intention of proceeding directly on his journey, went on board the steamboat, where, feeling too unwell to endure the fatigue of travelling, he returned to the hotel. The best medical aid the city affords was called in -- one physician being in attendance through the whole of his brief illness, and two others having been called in as consulting physicians.

The friends of the deceased in North Carolina will have the melancholy satisfaction of being assured that nothing was left undone, in the power of human aid, to turn aside the shaft of the destroyer. The disease was beyond the skill of the physician.

The Funeral will take place at Gadsby's Hotel at 9 o'clock a.m. this day (Wednesday). Gentlemen from North Carolina, and citizens generally, are respectfully invited to attend.
