Death of an Old Citizen

Mr. John S. Sheets, an old and highly respected citizen, died at his residence near the northern terminus of 7th street, last night at ten o'clock. The deceased had one of his leg's broken a short while ago by the kick of a horse in Willard's hotel stables, and had never left his bed since the occurrence, which doubtless precipitated his death. He was for a number of years a resident of South Washington, and was one of the oldest hack drivers in the city. He was for a long time the proprietor of a hotel near the Seventh street park. Mr. S. was greatly esteemed by all who knew him. He was nearly sixty years of age at the time of his death.
