C.O. Young Funeral To Be Held Tomorrow Native of Capital Served in House Office Building 30 Years -- Survived by Sister

Funeral services will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock for Charles O. Young, life-long resident of the city, who died Wednesday at his home, 115 New York avenue. Burial will be in Congressional Cemetery following the services, to be held at Hysong's funeral parlor.

Mr. Young, who had been connected with the House Post Office and served in other capacities in the House Office Building for about 30 years, was the son of Thomas E. and Emma Young. The name was connected with the carriage business in the city for almost three-quarters of a century, until the advent of the automobile.

The Young Carriage Factory was established on Pennsylvania avenue, between Four-and-a-half and Sixth streets in 1830, by Mr. Young's grandfather. It was conducted by his father, and his brother, Fred S. Young, who died a few years ago, until forced out of business by the horseless carriage early in this century.

He is survived by a sister, Carrie M. Young, with whom he made his home at 115 New York avenue.
